Jan 31, 2019 The Silent Generation: The Role of Meaning and Culture in Personal Branding (TSG: The Silent Generation…Acne is a disease of the sebaceous follicle due to hyperkeratinization of the follicle causing the follicle to close off and stop functioning. The disease is most commonly seen in teenagers in the so-called "teenage years" but patients can also be seen as young adults and even older adults. Acne is a very common disease, and its incidence is high in teenagers and teenagers. It can also be seen in adults who have genetically severe acne. It is very common in Asian populations and some other areas with high UVB radiation including Australia. Acne can vary in severity from mild to very severe and the severity of acne may vary from patient to patient. Acne may result in skin lesions ranging from mild spots such as simple comedo (blackhead) to severe, deep-seated nodules or large cysts with pus production, inflammation and severe scarring. Acne can be treated by various methods. For example, certain acne treatments include topical treatments, antibiotics, retinoids, hormones, benzoyl peroxide, and other acids or combinations of acids (e.g., potassium or glycolic acid in combination with alpha hydroxy acids) or other agents (e.g., clindamycin in combination with a topical vitamin D2 derivative such as pimecrolimus). Such acne treatments can be expensive and sometimes yield inconsistent results. Thus, alternative treatment methods are desirable to
